Privacy Policy

The National Cotton Council of America (NCC) is strongly committed to protecting the privacy of those visiting its site. The purpose of this privacy policy is to inform visitors about what kinds of information may be gathered when visiting the Beltwide Cotton Conferences web site, how that information may be used and whether the information is disclosed to anyone. Questions regarding this statement should be directed to General Information.

Visitors may browse the Beltwide Cotton Conferences web site without identifying themselves or revealing any information about themselves.

There are times, however, when information may be needed, such as a name, address, phone number, or email address. If you chose to provide this information for correspondence purposes, or to respond to a request, the NCC will not sell, trade, rent, use or disclose this information to anyone outside the NCC.

If you chose to provide this information to register for the conference, the NCC will disclose this information in the Proceedings of the Beltwide Cotton Conferences. If you pre-register online, your information will be shared with third party services only for the purpose of processing your online transaction.

Aggregate statistics about traffic patterns and related site information may be provided to internal sources.

The Beltwide Cotton Conferences site contains links to other web sites. NCC is not responsible for the privacy practices or the content of such web sites.
